Hiring Manager
ADP
Raleigh, NC

Dear Hiring Manager,

Hunting new business in a defined territory, cold prospecting small-to-medium businesses every day, and building pipeline from scratch through disciplined outbound activity — this is the ADP Outside Sales model in Raleigh, and it is the model I have been executing for four years. I am applying because ADP's territory structure and new business hunting culture align exactly with how I sell.

At KraftMaid Cabinetry, I held full revenue accountability for 23 accounts and a $5.47M territory in greater Boston. I used Salesforce CRM to manage my pipeline, built my territory call plan around high-opportunity targets, and exceeded quota — hitting 145% of monthly target in January 2026 — by combining consistent field activity with consultative closing. At TTI, I drove 5.15% year-over-year revenue growth on a $4.06M territory through daily cold prospecting to business owners and purchasing decision-makers. At DCU, I closed 50+ financial products per month through phone-based consultative selling — including discovery, objection handling, needs-based positioning, and close. Every role I have held has been quota-driven, prospecting-first, and activity-accountable.

ADP's payroll and HR solutions target the exact buyer profile I have always called on: business owners and operators who are busy, cost-conscious, and resistant to change. The consultative approach — lead with their pain, connect the solution to their business outcome, handle objections, and close — is second nature to me. I understand I will need to learn the ADP product suite and the specific regulatory landscape of SMB payroll, and I am prepared to do that with the same intensity I brought to learning product lines in every previous role.

I am relocating to Raleigh immediately and am available to start without delay. I would welcome a conversation about the Raleigh territory and what a strong first 90 days looks like for an ADP rep in this market.

Sincerely,
Collin Celic
