Hiring Manager
Evolus
Charlotte, NC

Dear Hiring Manager,

Selling a premium product to professional buyers who have every reason to stay with the incumbent takes more than a good pitch — it takes genuine relationship equity, a consultative approach, and the confidence to make the case on value rather than price. I built those skills managing a $5.47M premium product territory to 145% of monthly quota, and I am ready to apply them as an Aesthetic Experience Manager in Charlotte.

Evolus's AEM role is fundamentally about building trusted practitioner partnerships, educating aesthetic professionals on the Jeuveau product line, and driving account adoption through consistent high-quality engagement — not just transactional selling. At KraftMaid Cabinetry, I held that exact type of relationship with 23 accounts across greater Boston: I was the primary point of contact for dealer principals and design professionals who had high standards, many alternatives, and no obligation to give me the sale. I earned the business repeatedly by understanding their needs better than my competitors did and by delivering structured product demonstrations and training that made their teams more effective. I grew market share during an industry-wide 8% downturn.

At TTI, I conducted live product demonstrations for professional tool buyers — making the case for premium brands against lower-priced incumbents through performance-based comparison selling. That is not categorically different from an AEM presenting Jeuveau's clinical profile and practice economics to a skeptical injector who already has a BOTOX contract. The selling motion translates directly.

I am relocating to Charlotte without timeline constraints and am available to begin immediately. Evolus's culture of ambitious, relationship-driven growth is exactly the environment I perform best in. I would welcome the chance to connect.

Sincerely,
Collin Celic
